Happenings of the Day in Various Parts of the Nation's Capital.

If it comes to hard luck, just plain, down right hard luck, Alexander Bannwart, member of the Emergency Peace Federation, of Boston, can tell a tale of woe, which has them all beaten.

In the first place, Bannwart tried to organize a baseball league up in the Massachusetts metropolis—it fell through.

Bannwart then came to Washington, in an effort to keep the country out of the conflict abroad by buttonholing members of Congress and lobbying against war. In an encounter with Senator Lodge, he received a black eye, and a bruised countenance, the details of which have been fully told.

Released from the Sixth precinct police station, where he was held following the fight, he went to Emergency Peace Federation headquarters, and there tried to urge pacifists to stand behind the President in the time of need. For his pains he was asked to get out.

Met on Pennsylvania avenue yesterday, he sorrowfully told a Times reporter that he had been ostracized by members of the Emergency Peace Federation, laughed at by everybody because of his fight with the Senator from his home State, had been unsuccessful in his peace lobby, unsuccessful in his efforts to have his brother pacifists back the President—and he was going back to Boston, and when he gets home—curtain.
